Michael wore the same set of uniform every day for the first three weeks of school.

When the other students began to notice this, he became the target of their taunts and laughter. However, there was nothing he could do as his parents simply could not afford another set. Two of the students piling on Michael's agony were Antwan and Kristopher.

(17)

Over time, they realised that their harsh words felt like bullying, which seemed to be crushing Michael's spirit. Something finally clicked. That day, they went home and dug into their piggybanks.
(18)

The next day, they looked for Michael who was understandably apprehensive. These (19)

boys were his bullies and were considerably bigger in size than him. Much to his delight, his bullies apologised and handed him a bag with two sets of uniform. Michael was blown away by their generosity. Besides the new uniforms, he had made two new friends.

The man looked down at the body and wondered what to do next. His eyes then darted from the conclusion paragraph. He reread his essay many times, contenually scanning for errors. He was determined to cruft the perfect essay for his assignment.

(39)

(40)

(41)

(42)

(43)

He was adament to allow no flaws. Everything had to be perfect, up to the last character.

(44)

He could found no mistakes. It was the perfect essay. Then, he doubted as his eyes fell upon a section of the essay. "This part has too many unnecesary details. It needs to go." He deleted it with haste and wrote again.

(46)

From then on, every flaw was quickly replaced. If it sounded even the slighter bit wrong, it was as good as gone. Then he realised that the replaced sections were hard as good as he had wanted them to be. He began to be concientous, taking out chunks of the body and the introduction. The ending was all and gone. Hours passed. Eventually, he perfected his masterpiece. No mistakes. No errors at all. Nothing sounded wrong.

He stared at his work, flawless in every espect.

He stared at a blank page.
